Deaths by Month

The formula for the trend line is: $-0.00229182 \times \text{Month of Event Date} + 120.103$. The slope of -0.00229182 indicates that the total death count decreases by 0.00229182 per month according to the trend line's estimate. The value of 120.103 indicates that the estimated death count at the start of our trend line, in the first month recorded, was roughly 120.103 . This value and the slope value are both estimates based on the trend line, and describe a general trend rather than the actual values.

The R-square value is 0.229595 and the p-value is <0.0001 . The R-square value indicates that about 22.9595% of the variation in death count is explained by the month data. This value is not high, and so our trend line does not do a very good job of explaining the variation in total deaths per month. The low p-value, on the other hand, indicates that there is a statistically significant relationship between the death count and the months in our data. Therefore, the progression of months does correspond to a change in the total death count.

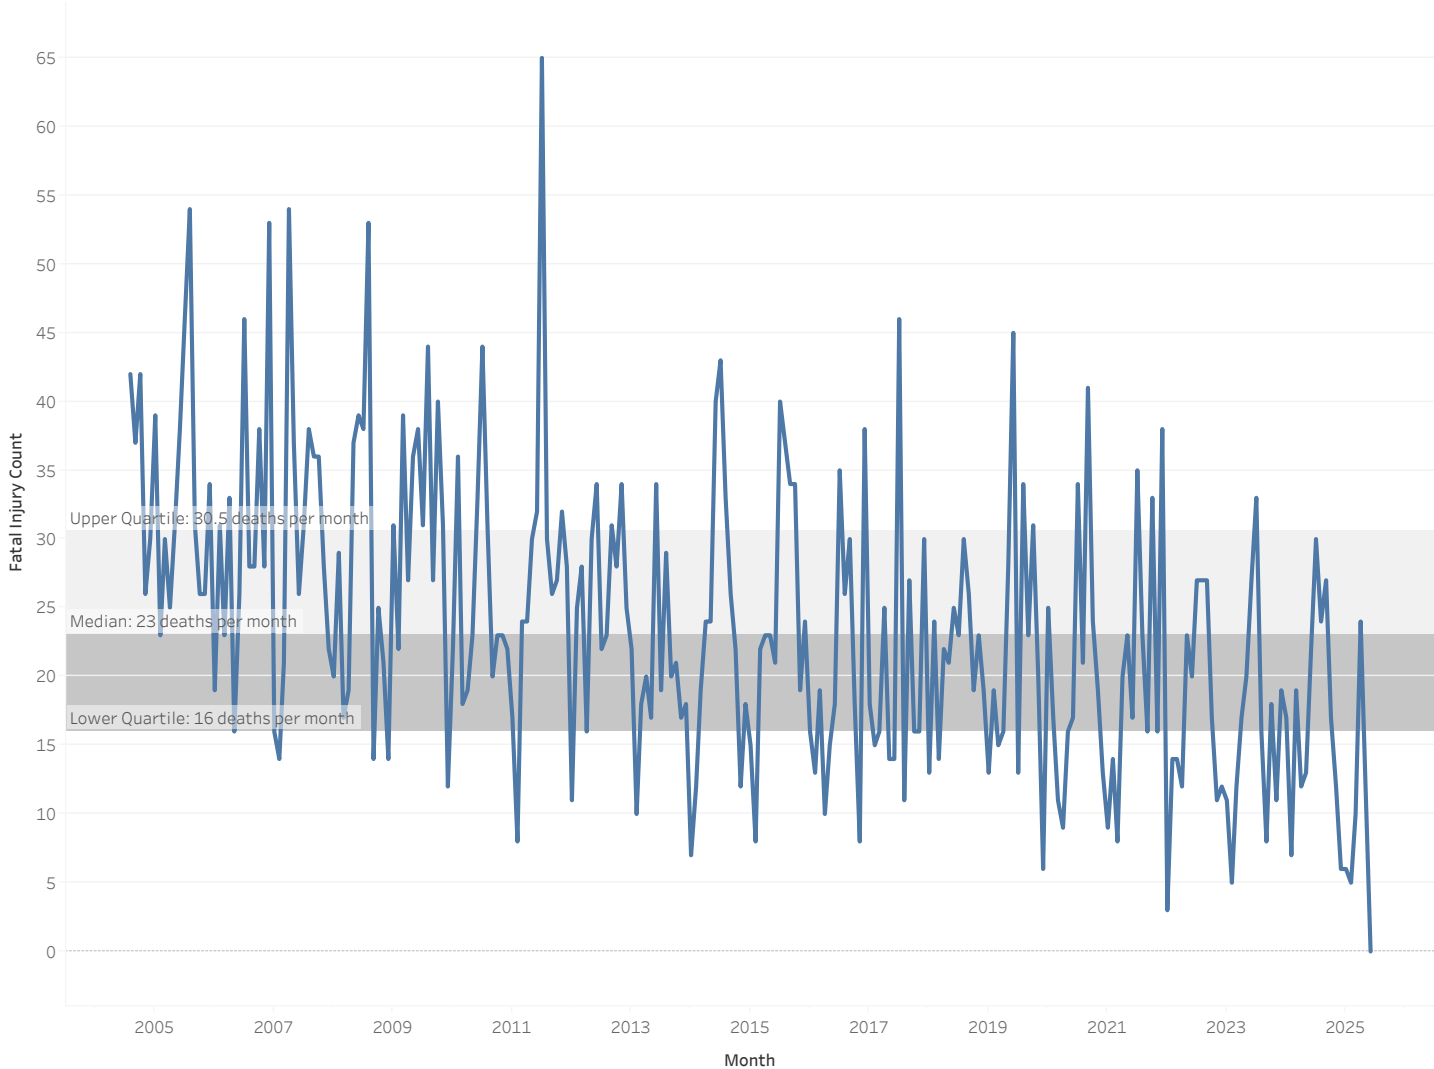

Deaths Before/After a selected date

The formula for the trend line is: $-0.00229182 * \text{Month of Event Date} + 120.103$. The slope of -0.00229182 indicates that the total death count decreases by 0.00229182 per month according to the trend line's estimate.
